Even though summer doesn't officially end until September 23rd, we can't help but be a bit bothered that our summertime fun has come to an end. The season went by way too fast and it feels like there is still so much left to do—and there is!

The best part about travel is that it's always summer somewhere in the world, so before we say goodbye to shorts and hello to pea coats, let's plan a getaway (or two) that will keep us basking in the sunshine just a little longer.

From beaches and glamping to fine dining, we've rounded up a few of our favorite fall escapes that will stretch you summer and your joy. You know we wouldn't steer you wrong, so grab your passport, gather your frequent flyer miles and let's keep this party going!

For the Glampers: Big Sur, California:

When it comes to weather, California has certainly been blessed. The mild temps make it perfect for experiencing sunshine long after the winter chill has hit the east coast. Head out west to get closer to nature with a glamping experience at Ventana Big Sur. Tucked away among California's redwoods, you'll enjoy hiking, gardening, meditating, and even take Thai Chi before getting your luxe on with a gourmet s'mores kit, wine, cheese, and so much more.
